AN AMERICAN STEAMSHIP LINE.

Something About the Famous Steamers That Lashed Before the War.

The most important American rival with the British, continental and other lines in transatlantic steam navigation was the famous Collins line.

They were liberally admitted to the government paying the company $300,000 yearly for carrying the mails conditions being imposed that the company should make twenty-six voyages per year, and that the passage from port to port should be better in point of time than that made by the Cunarders.

The vessels of the Collins line met the conditions successfully, its vessels making westward trips that averaged eleven days, ten hours and twenty-one minutes, as compared with twelve days, nineteen hours and twenty-six minutes by the British steamships.

The vessels of the Collins line cost upward of $700,000 each. This was a great deal of money to put into a steamship in those days.

ENMITY OR INDIFFERENCE.

Attitude of the Church Toward Labor as Seen by Two Witnesses.

Mr. Morris Ross delivered an address before the Indianapolis Central Labor union which has caused considerable discussion in that community.

More than a year ago there was a strike in a mill in the north, as a result of a long period of depression in the coal trade, which for months had been holding the market at a low level.

It involved from 1,500 to 2,000 men and from 3,000 to 4,000 women. Justice or injustice was soon lost sight of in the condition of starvation. Food and clothing were not available for weeks in all the regions around about.

In a city of 120,000 people, a hundred men held by rail from the city, there were 100 churches. In those weeks of many days the only thing that was heard was the appeal for help to feed the hungry and clothe the naked.

So, too, help me, I speak not a word, but like dumb statues, or breathing stones, stand each other out.

except one—and the preacher in that pulpit is not revealed as the money by the alms men give. In the same city, on an invitation from organized labor to speak upon the righteous or fallacy of the four year wage law, but two out of the hundred pulpits responded; the favorable, the unfavorable, with one exception, ignored it.

Examples are cited in illustration of what will be conceded by qualified observation that the churchmen of the day are not a people who are absolutely indifferent to labor.

And the workman today is not found in the churches. What exception there may be in all this as to the Catholic communion, and the Catholic social work of the church, which may estimate for himself.

It affirms that the workmen are not positively hostile to the church. They are not negatively, as one with the sense of neglect; but as one who has been abandoned and a period of departure, who has been abandoned and a period of departure, who has been abandoned and a period of departure.

Organized labor is the road to bettering; labor organized for the purpose of bettering its condition at every step toward the right, just share in the profits of production. In this view, the laborer will, in my opinion, have little if any help from the church—much good people in the church, but the church has made friends with the profits of the world.
