POLICE ATTEMPT TO MOVE THE CARS AT INDIANAPOLIS.

Mayor Sullivan finally decides to assist the company—the cars were moved from the track—the fire in town falls and is abandoned.

Indianapolis, Feb. 27.—No less than a dozen cars were overturned here this morning at about seven o'clock.

The crowd in the meantime swelled to thousands, but the police cleared the way a few feet at a time and with dogged persistence the cars were moved forward daily.

Yesterday court stenographer Claude Bolford started to read the testimony of the witnesses who were called to the stand.

The result so far is not encouraging, as every attempt to move a car has been frustrated.

Several policemen were ordered to the police at this late day is severely criticized, as it has only been considered by organized labor as machinery on the part of the city government.

JOHN'S TENDER CARE

The Street from Emma's Racer Place Committed to the World.

"Lost to the world" seem like cruel words, but they appear to have been the fate of Anna Gibson, the inmate of Emma Rogers' old place, arrested Friday for stealing a watch from a fashionable society gentleman.

The man from whom the watch was taken is reported to have been arrested on Anna's arrest or the idea of presenting her for larceny from the person and yesterday morning when there was a prospect that the girl would escape without punishment.

The girl was taken into Police court at the afternoon session and arraigned on the warrant. She pleaded not guilty but was remanded to the custody of the arresting officer.

Here comes a funny part in the deal. The warrant states that the girl was turned over to him. The report of the arrest was that a warrant for her arrest on a charge of being a woman of the town.

MRS. BROWN'S COPIES.

1880. The entries showed that nearly every Sunday Mr. Brown went to Grandville and bought meat coming from his own farm.

THE CROWD in attendance upon the Brown will case was, if possible, a little larger than on any previous occasion.

AT A MORNING session the cross-examination of Mr. Brown was continued. He said that he never said to Mr. James H. Brown that it was of no use to him to give anything to Mr. and Mrs. Hayden.

AT THE TIME of Mr. Brown's death his property was inventoried at $165,500. "Jockey" used to wear habitually a pair of trousers which he had bought from the city officials because his taxes were high.

THE PEOPLES COLUMN.

The Hopes of Ingersoll. EDITOR: MONROE. You have lately devoted several columns of your space to a discussion on religion between you, Robert Ingersoll and several orthodox clergymen of New York. It has seemed to me that a good position would be served by calling the latter attention of your readers to some points set forth in this debate. The renowned orator has written an article which is entitled "A Christmas Sermon," and in it, after his remarks upon Christianity do not come with the tidings of eternal joy, but with a message of eternal grief. It came with the threat of everlasting grief. It came with the threat of everlasting torture on his lips. It was a cruel thing—the wailing of love and kindness in man. But as a torchbearer, as a bringer of joy, it has been a failure. It has filled the future with fear and flame and made God the keeper of an eternal penitentiary, destined to be the home of nearly all the sons of men."

As was naturally to be expected, Mr. Ingersoll at once brought upon himself a storm of denials and execration. The first to rise against the paper calling the public authorities to arrest and punish this wicked infidel for blasphemy; and other clergymen were little less excited.

Of course our natural tendency is to run to extremes, especially if we are irritated, or if we are special pleaders, but it seems proper for us to imagine wherein can be Mr. Ingersoll's utterances be considered blasphemous. But why is it that we are so ready to attribute to God that which is contrary to his nature, and does not do as we do, and to deny what we do, that is a true definition and it seems to be a very good one and at least, how can the charges of blasphemy hold against me, may more properly bring the charge of libel against Mr. Ingersoll, as I feel very truly and justly that I have done a great deal of everlasting torture on his lips, and never made God the keeper of an eternal penitentiary, and never wailed with shame that the church, which some centuries after Christ assumed to be the church of God, should have to mitigate the doctrines Mr. Ingersoll so bitterly denounced, but I deny that I have done any libel, and I deny that I am the author of his blinded and misjudged assent followers.

To the credit of Judaism it should be said, that while the old Acedians, Egyptians, Assyrians, and Persians, none of whom the Jews are descended from, were sojourning at various times, held the various ideas which Mr. Ingersoll attributes to Christianity, the Jewish Scriptures are utterly silent concerning them. Polytheism, idolatry, and the devil had no countenance in the Old Testament. It may be true that some of the pagan ideas had imparted some of the pagan ideas into their religion, yet system of their religion is to pollute their Scriptures with them.

Accordingly, it is utterly incredible that the Jews, constantly professing the Ten Commandments, and who claimed to bring in a new and better covenant, should come to the charge of idolatry, and that he should insert into his system the very worst features of false heathenism.

This has always been Mr. Ingersoll's besetting sin; he persists in confounding the religion of the Jews with the religions which a bastard church indogmas some centuries afterwards. No faithful man of discernment will be guilty of such an injustice. Jesus himself declared that he was sent to "preach the Gospel to the poor, to proclaim release to the captives, and recovering of sight to the blind, to proclaim the acceptable year of the Lord, and to comfort the sorrowful, and to send us in our charge Jesus with his acts.

Mr. Ingersoll is equally shallow, it seems to me, when he says: "In a little while religion will take its place with science, with the black arts, and its ministers will take rank with magicians and sleight of hand performers." It is a long time since we have passed current as religion and those whose craft will perish with these counterfeit religions. The Lord Jesus Christ, Mr. Ingersoll says; but if St. James was right when he declared "If religion is dead, it is dead before God, and it is dead: To visit the fatherless and widows in their affliction, and keep unspotted from the world." If we believe religion will take its place with astrology. CHARLES K. GIBSON.

LABOR'S THREE FOES.

THE IDLE WEALTHY, THE OUT-OF-WORKS, AND THE CRIMINALS.

All Read Heavily from the Products of Honest Toil, Though in Differing Ways, and from Differing Motives—Something is Radically Wrong.

(Special Correspondence.)

The honest wage earner bears besides his own burden, and two other classes of society—the idle wealthy who are unemployable, and the idle poor who are unemployable. No individual member of either class is personally to blame, but the fact presents an anomaly that should convince every thoughtful mind that something is wrong in the organization of society which ought to be investigated. It does not do to merely denounce and abuse the one class or shift the nation's grief against the iniquity of the other. More bitter arraignment, without logic and without the least power or numbers of the rich, nor will immigration laws, vagrant laws and tramp ordinances decrease the aggregate of human misery being fostered by the world.

The wealthy class, which from all the prevailing instinct of self preservation, and the law of nature, would preserve their privileges, do not affect the condition of the wage class more definitely than does that large army of idlers and criminals which lie a seething, threatening mass beneath them. If economics had to deal only with workers who were always engaged in some labor, there would be no labor question as we understand it today. Human beings are too free to leave unoccupied, and too numerous that do not bring with them actual suffering, and if all people were secure in positions of any kind that laured them to do their duty, and to do what they would rather than find into ills they know not of. It is the certainty that just without the comparatively comfortable means of generating their wages, there surges a dismal throng ever ready to rush over any feeble barriers labor may erect, who are prone to discontent, a sense of insecurity, a tendency to study, investigate and change things, and thus a labor question is evolved. It is not the idle rich, but the idle poor, and this inevitable army is considered by the many different ways, but it is always there. There is no getting rid of it without revolutionizing the whole system of society down to its very foundations. It cannot be eradicated or controlled by any further recruits for the criminal class—a yet more perplexing factor in the labor problem; its injurious effects may be combated successfully in one direction only to be found pressing harder in another.

It is natural that the industrial classes should feel a deep antagonism toward those who constitute this army, first because directly or indirectly they must claim a share in the products of their labor. Whether doled out in charities from accumulations of unpaid labor, or taken in petty thievery, all their consume was originally created by the labor of the workers. And again, they continually harass them and endanger the workers' opportunities for toil by their idleness. Every struggle of organized labor against the encroachments of organized capital is hampered by that army of idlers, who are so keen they forget fraternity and mutual dependence. The "scab" is not always to blame for being one, but the exigencies of the market, which have passed curiously speaking—necessary to success make it essential that he should be regarded as an enemy.

It is a fact we may remark that the fact that every strike is hindered by an influx of idlers into places left vacant, proves that the old accusation against the army of tramps and idlers men, "that they would not work if they could," is false. The idle army is inevitable under present industrial systems; its members may keep changing, they may or may not be willing and energetic—it cuts no figure, for there are always about the same proportion of idlers. Those employed grow to exhaustion, and there are no places for those outside. Naturally the fittest survive, and the least able are the first to be discarded. To obtain the place, but it does not show that the unemployed are necessarily shiftless, victims or lazy. The ranks of the working class are filled there are the ranks of criminals to threaten the welfare of wage workers. This much despised class contains members who are ready to blame for the position they occupy than are the starving "scabs." In the first place a study of criminal records and statistics will show that the vast majority of criminals are made by police, magistrates and judges, who are the most miserably vicious of their fellowmen, and then one may know that the official stamp of "criminal" does not always make a villain of a man. The worst enemies of mankind are not those without prison bars.

But once a man is marked a criminal serving sentence he has no responsibility for what he may do. Perhaps he is better than the vast majority of the miserably vicious of their fellowmen, and then one may know that the official stamp of "criminal" does not always make a villain of a man. The worst enemies of mankind are not those without prison bars.

But once a man is marked a criminal serving sentence he has no responsibility for what he may do. any or tramps and criminals, striving to carefully consider and deal with. Co-operation among all the "have naughts," will go far toward settling the problem. Whatever tends to combine the interests and sympathies of the poor, whether employment or not, is desirable. A spirit of protest against the custom of contracting convict labor should be encouraged. A state is disgraced that will "scab" under the very men it is supposed to protect. The contractor who will use this "cheap" labor is worse than the criminals he employs.

We may thus, until we reach a more just and scientific arrangement of society, in which there shall be no armies of idlers, parasites and manufactured criminals, ameliorate or lessen the wrongs and difficulties under which the real workers suffer in the present.

A CURIOSITY.

Specimens of the Intelligences of Some of Our Society Servers.

There is an organization of Jewish workmen in Hartford, known as the "Hebrew Brotherhood." They are holding an open meeting once in three months for the purpose of discussing economic questions. Those who should know every thing about the world, and this society are men of superior education, and that while the addresses made at these open meetings are generally excellent in character, agitation is on educational lines and only conservative methods are advocated.

It is said that a Hebrew politician of Hartford is very much opposed to the section's educational meetings, and has long been endeavoring to break them up. A few weeks ago he succeeded in accomplishing his purpose. When the members of the section and others who came in response to the invitation, reached the hall in which the meeting was to be held, they found a police officer on guard at the entrance and upon the door a notice prohibiting notice, of which a facsimile copy is herewith given.

There was no disturbance, those who had assembled quietly dispersing. A committee called upon the "Chief of Police" to ascertain why the right of lawful assembly was prohibited by him, when that representative of Law and order and intelligent citizenship said, "I would not permit my own countrymen to hold such a meeting on Sunday, and certainly would not permit foreigners."

Gladiator's Mistake. In a long article printed in the London Weekly Star of Feb. 5, Mr. Gladstone says that he has been told that a man happened at Manchester, in 1819, when 100,000 workmen held a reform meeting, and while so doing were charged with cavalry by the king's troops. The man, who rode the defenseless people down beneath their horses' hoofs, killing eleven of them and wounding 1000. He contends that even with the present right of the people to hold public meetings, which right, he insists, ought not to be hampered in the slightest by unnecessary local regulations or other legislative restrictions.

If by the present Mr. Gladstone means the man who rode the defenseless people down beneath their horses' hoofs, killing eleven of them and wounding 1000. He contends that even with the present right of the people to hold public meetings, which right, he insists, ought not to be hampered in the slightest by unnecessary local regulations or other legislative restrictions.
