Biographical / Historical

The Grand Rapids Public Library traces its origins to 1871 when a special act of the state legislature combined three local school districts into one district. With this combination their three libraries were also combined; and the libraries of the Y.M.C.A and the Ladies' City Library Association were added into that single collection (the books of the Ladies' City Library Association were later recalled by the association). This combination produced a collection of 4,045 volumes, housed on the second floor of the Leonard Store (140-44 Monroe, NW). By 1975 these quarters were so cramped that the library moved into larger quarters on the second floor of the Ledyard Building (Pearl at Ottawa). In 1888 the library was moved to the second floor of the then new City Hall. Following a gift from Martin Ryerson in 1902, a new building was constructed for the library on Library Street. A significant addition to this building was erected in 1967.

The library has operated several branch systems through its history. Initially all local public schools had branch libraries (26 was the maximum under this system). A branch was also established in the Bissell House, a turn-of-the-century social settlement house in Grand Rapids modeled after Hull House in Chicago. With time the school branch libraries were opened to the public, in addition to the school children. In 1907 the Board obtained the Bell Telephone building at Bridge and Caldwell and operated the West Side branch from that structure. In 1926 the current West Side branch was constructed on that site. Over the course of time the branch operation in the schools were phased out and a series of neighborhood branch operations were opened instead.

When organized in 1871, the library belonged to the Board of Education, which exercised supervision of the facilities. By special legislative act in 1903 (amended 1905) a separate Board of Library Commissioners was authorized to oversee the library, with the Superintendent of Schools an ex-officio member of the Board.
